

Dec 69 AD

Vitellius surrenders; Flavians capture Rome; Vitellius was killed

20 Dec. 69

Vitellius was murdered in the Forum.

His body was thrown into the Tiber.

20 Dec 69

The Flavian Army fought their way into Rome. Vitellius had himself carried to his wife's house on the AVENTINE, intending to flee to Campania, but then changed his mind, and returned to the Palace. He found it deserted, so tying a money-belt round his waist he disguised himself in dirty clothing and hid in the door-keeper's lodge, leaning a couch & mattress against the door. The Flavian troops soon dragged

Vatilius from his hiding place, and hauled him half naked to the Forum, where he was tortured before being killed and thrown into the Tiber.

69 AD

The lieutenants of Vitellius defeated
Otho's troops at Bedriacum;
Otho duly committed suicide.
Vitellius entered Rome and assumed the purple while Vespasian was being proclaimed in Egypt and Syria.

WILD CONFUSION

The legions in Spain had proclaimed their general CALPA emperor. CALPA was soon thrust from the throne by OTHO, supported by the PRAETORIANS. OTHO in turn was overthrown by VITELLIUS, at the head of the army of the RHINE. Then the legions in Syria proclaimed their general, FLAVIUS VESPASIANUS (VESPASIAN). From his name FLAVIUS, he and his two sons are known as the FLAVIAN emperors
